

Exhibit

2

\(https://blog.mcmenamins.com/\)\(https://blog.mcmenamins.com/\)

“I Have No Idea What I Saw”

By History Department (<https://blog.mcmenamins.com/author/mcmhistory/>) | February 12, 2019
| 0 ● (<https://blog.mcmenamins.com/i-have-no-idea-what-i-saw/#respond>)

Hello from the History Department —

We just announced the 20th Annual UFO Festival (<http://www.ufofest.com/>) line-up – and wow, is it a good one! We are especially pleased to welcome guest speaker U.S. Naval Commander David Fravor, who was an actual Top Gun Naval pilot (yes, as in Maverick, Goose and Iceman). Cmdr. Fravor has never before made a public appearance to talk about what he experienced. The 2019 UFO Fest is the first (and maybe only) opportunity to see the commander discuss his highly unusual sighting and ask him questions about it.

Why not let The New York Times explain what happened, from its December 2017 report, “2 Navy Airmen and an Object That ‘Accelerated Like Nothing I’ve Ever Seen’”?

*****

Cmdr. David Fravor and Lt. Cmdr. Jim Slaight were on a routine training mission 100 miles out into the Pacific when the radio in each of their F/A-18F Super Hornets crackled: An operations officer aboard the U.S.S. Princeton, a Navy cruiser, wanted to know if they were carrying weapons.

“Two CATM-9s,” Commander Fravor replied, referring to dummy missiles that could not be fired. He had not been expecting any hostile exchanges off the coast of San Diego that November afternoon in 2004.

Commander Fravor, in a recent interview with The New York Times, recalled what happened next. Some of it is captured in a video made public by officials with a Pentagon program that investigated U.F.O.s.

“Well, we’ve got a real-world vector for you,” the radio operator said, according to Commander Fravor. For two weeks, the operator said, the Princeton had been tracking mysterious aircraft. The objects appeared suddenly at 80,000 feet, and then hurtled toward the sea, eventually stopping at 20,000 feet and hovering. Then they either dropped out of radar range or shot straight back up.

The radio operator instructed Commander Fravor and Commander Slaight, who has given a similar account, to investigate.

The two fighter planes headed toward the objects. The Princeton alerted them as they closed in, but when they arrived at “merge plot” with the object — naval aviation parlance for being so close that the Princeton could not tell which were the objects and which were the fighter jets — neither Commander Fravor nor Commander Slaight could see anything at first. There was nothing on their radars, either.

Then, Commander Fravor looked down to the sea. It was calm that day, but the waves were breaking over something that was just below the surface. Whatever it was, it was big enough to cause the sea to churn.

Hovering 50 feet above the churn was an aircraft of some kind — whitish — that was around 40 feet long and oval in shape. The craft was jumping around erratically, staying over the wave disturbance but not moving in any specific direction, Commander Fravor said. The disturbance looked like frothy waves and foam, as if the water were boiling.

Commander Fravor began a circular descent to get a closer look, but as he got nearer the object began ascending toward him. It was almost as if it were coming to meet him halfway, he said.

Commander Fravor abandoned his slow circular descent and headed straight for the object.

But then the object peeled away. “It accelerated like nothing I’ve ever seen,” he said in the interview. He was, he said, “pretty weirded out.”

The two fighter jets then conferred with the operations officer on the Princeton and were told to head to a rendezvous point 60 miles away, called the cap point, in aviation parlance.

They were en route and closing in when the Princeton radioed again. Radar had again picked up the strange aircraft.

“Sir, you won’t believe it,” the radio operator said, “but that thing is at your cap point.”

“We were at least 40 miles away, and in less than a minute this thing was already at our cap point,” Commander Fravor, who has since retired from the Navy, said in the interview.

By the time the two fighter jets arrived at the rendezvous point, the object had disappeared.

The fighter jets returned to the Nimitz, where everyone on the ship had learned of Commander Fravor’s encounter and was making fun of him.

Commander Fravor’s superiors did not investigate further and he went on with his career, deploying to the Persian Gulf to provide air support to ground troops during the Iraq war. But he does remember what he said that evening to a fellow pilot who asked him what he thought he had seen.

“I have no idea what I saw,” Commander Fravor replied to the pilot. “It had no plumes, wings or rotors and outran our F-18s.”

But, he added, “I want to fly one.”

---

Posted in History (<https://blog.mcmenamins.com/category/historyblog/>)

Leave a Comment

Comment

(<https://blog.mcmenamins.com/>)

Name (required)

Email (will not be published) (required)

Website

Submit Comment

---

@2017 McMenamins Blog | Powered by Project A

McMENAMINS HOME
HISTORY
PEOPLE
MUSIC
PRIVATE EVENTS

"I Have No Idea What I Saw"

By History Department | February 12, 2019 | 0

Hallo from the History Department —

We just announced the 20th Annual UFO Festival line-up — and wow, is it a good one! We are especially pleased to welcome guest speaker U.S. Naval Commander David Fravor, who was an actual Top Gun Naval pilot (yep, as in Meyerick, Goose and Iceman). Cmdr. Fravor has never before made a public appearance to talk about what he experienced. The 2019 UFO Fest is the first (and maybe only) opportunity to see the commander discuss his highly unusual sighting and see him questions about it.

Why not let The New York Times explain what happened, from its December 2017 report, "2 Navy Aviators and an Object That 'Accelerated Like Nothing I've Ever Seen'"

*****

Cmdr. David Fravor and Lt. Cmdr. Jim Slaght were on a routine training mission 100 miles out into the Pacific when the radio in each of their F/A-18F Super Hornets cracked. An operations officer aboard the U.S.S. Princeton, a heavy cruiser, wanted to know if they were carrying weapons.

"Two CATM-6s," Commander Fravor replied, referring to dummy missiles that could not be fired. He had not even expecting any hostile exchanges off the coast of San Diego that November afternoon in 2004.

Commander Fravor, in a recent interview with The New York Times, recalled what happened next. Some of it is captured in a video made public by officials with a Pentagon program that investigated U.F.O.s:

"Well, we've got a real-world vector for you," the radio operator said, according to Commander Fravor. For two weeks, the operator said, the Princeton had been tracking mysterious aircraft. The objects appeared suddenly at 80,000 feet, and then hurtled toward the sea, eventually stopping at 20,000 feet and hovering. Then they either dropped out of radar range or shot straight back up.

The radio operator instructed Commander Fravor and Commander Slaght, who has given a similar account, to investigate.

The two fighter planes headed toward the objects. The Princeton alerted them as they closed in, but when they arrived at "merge point" with the object — a naval aviation parlance for being so close that the Princeton could not tell which were the objects and which were the fighter jets — neither Commander Fravor nor Commander Slaght could see anything at first. There was nothing on their radars, either.

Then, Commander Fravor looked down to the sea. It was calm that day, but the waves were breaking over something that was just below the surface. Whatever it was, it was big enough to cause the sea to churn.

Hovering 50 feet above the chum was an aircraft of some kind — whitish — that was around 40 feet long and oval in shape. The craft was jumping around erratically, staying over the wave disturbance but not moving in any specific direction, Commander Fravor said. The disturbance looked like frothy waves and foam, as if the water were boiling.

Commander Fravor began a circular descent to get a closer look, but as he got nearer the object began ascending toward him. It was almost as if it were coming to meet him halfway, he said.

Commander Fravor abandoned his slow circular descent and headed straight for the object.

But then the object peeled away. "It accelerated like nothing I've ever seen," he said in the interview. He adds, he said, "pretty weirded out."

The two fighter jets then conferred with the operations officer on the Princeton and were told to head to a rendezvous point 60 miles away, called the cap point. In aviation parlance, they were en route and closing in when the Princeton radioed again. Radar had again picked up the strange aircraft.

"Sir, you won't believe it," the radio operator said, "but that thing is at your cap point."

"We were at least 40 miles away, and in less than a minute that thing was already at our cap point," Commander Fravor, who has since retired from the Navy, said in the interview. By the time the two fighter jets arrived at the rendezvous point, the object had disappeared.

The fighter jets returned to the Nimitz, where everyone on the ship had learned of Commander Fravor's encounter and was making fun of him.

Commander Fravor's superiors did not investigate further and he went on with his career, deploying to the Persian Gulf to provide air support to ground troops during the Iraq war. But he does remember what he said that evening to a fellow pilot who asked him what he thought he had seen.

"I have no idea what I saw," Commander Fravor replied to the pilot. "It had no plumes, wings or rotors and outran our F-16s."

But, he added, "I want to fly one."

Posted in History

Leave a Comment

Comment

Name (required)

Email (will not be published) (required)

Website

Submit Comment

Recent Posts

- Seeing the World at 15 Miles per Hour
- 30 Years at the Conville Pub
- Celebrating Our 35th Anniversary of Our First Beer
- The Brandos in Kalamia
- An Extraordinary Existence

Recent Comments

- Joy on Seeing the World at 15 Miles per Hour
- Merry on Seeing the World at 15 Miles per Hour
- Kevin Boddy on Seeing the World at 15 Miles per Hour
- Tom Sowards on Seeing the World at 15 Miles per Hour
- Rayna Nigro on Seeing the World at 15 Miles per Hour

Archives

